

This is just another deplorable act on the part of a Republican backed organization to try to manipulate an election in which their chosen candidate is faltering. Had Fahrenheit 9/11 been allowed to broadcast on network television Bush supporters would be protesting just as loudly. The fact that Sinclair group feels they must air this negative documentary of John Kerry to persuade voters for Bush only goes to show the failure of the Bush campaign to effectively represent their candidate as a better choice over John Kerry. The Bush campaign must instead resort to negative attacks sponsored by third parties to do their dirty work. It is an intolerable disgrace that this is the way our sitting president, his campaign staff, and his Republican party followers choose to go about winning this election. If the Bush campaign and Republicans had any dignity at all they would demand that Sinclair forego the airing of the anti-John Kerry documentary and try to win this election like men, rather than like cowards kidding behind their mothers skirts.
